

About the Author

Nigel Cooper is a British author of fiction. He writes across a diverse range of genres including: contemporary, psychological thrillers, suspense, crime and supernatural. He found his 'voice' as the editor of his own magazine, which he ran for eight years before becoming a full time author of fiction in 2011. He studied screenwriting in London and ran a video production company before becoming a freelance journalist writing articles, reviews and stories for various newspapers and magazines. Nigel also studied to be a private investigator and spent a year working as a PI, the knowledge of which comes in handy with his crime writing today. Having attained a degree in classical piano performance Nigel loves nothing more than to sit and play Beethoven when he isn't writing. Also, being a Hi-Fi nut and a vinyl connoisseur he can often be found in Market Hill in Cambridge browsing through the used vinyl stalls in the hope of picking up a mint condition first pressing of 'Selling England by the Pound'. Nigel also loves a good game of badminton. He lives and writes in Cambridgeshire, UK.

When you live in the dark, you can't see your shadows.

After a lifetime of misery, bad luck and depression, a cheating wife and an ensuing 'accident' with a knife that brought his career as a concert pianist to an abrupt end, Marion 'Red' Redwood has decided to end his life.

Red has built an elaborate contraption in his living room that is guaranteed to get the job done and he's given himself precisely three months to get his affairs in order, with the help of his newly appointed therapist.

He's started to donate all his earthly possessions to the few friends that he has, the rest he's listed for sale on eBay – the resulting funds of which he will also give away.

His work car and his cherished sports car are both up for sale on AutoTrader and he's wound down his driving instructor practice and is not taking on any new learner drivers, except one...

When you live in the dark you can't see your shadows – but she can...
